1. Purpose:

You asked us at our meeting on 2 Dec 74 to look into the matter of access to State Department controlled distribution messages (NODIS, EXDIS, LIMDIS and STADIS). This memorandum summarizes a quick look at the problem.

2. Discussion:

a. We reviewed the importance, distribution, and access to STATE controlled distribution messages with a variety of key personnel in this building. We contacted the following offices and spoke to these personnel.

Office	Individual Contacted
NIO/USSR	[REDACTED] Asst NIO
NIO/WesternEurope	[REDACTED] Chief
Director, Political Research/DDI	[REDACTED] Dep. Chief Soviet Br.
Chief, Office of Current Intelligence	[REDACTED] Chief, East Europe and USSR
Executive Office, DCI	[REDACTED] Executive Asst. (NODIS)
Operations Center	[REDACTED] Chief

b. Views of these personnel regarding EXDIS and LIMDIS messages were similar. Opinion varied for NODIS. No one in this building knew much about STADIS traffic.

Subject: The NODIS, EXDIS, LIMDIS, STADIS Problem

(1) EXDIS and LIMDIS do not appear to pose problems in this building. NIOs have good access and receive copies with few constraints. There is fixed distribution to other key offices, and additional copies are reproduced fairly routinely. Analysts have access. As an example, the Chief, Soviet Branch, Current Intelligence stated his office received six copies routinely. This he finds adequate. The NIOs said "no problem." [redacted] said OPR had a mechanical problem on distribution of these messages but this was an internal administrative problem.

(2) STADIS. No one wanted to express a judgment. The system is relatively new and no one was comfortable discussing it. Col. Broadus Bailey, now in POL/MIL at STATE, says STADIS receives fairly wide distribution in that building. He states it is used for unilateral matters such as in developing a STATE position vis-a-vis DoD. He does not consider this traffic of intelligence importance. He says, incidentally, he rarely sees EXDIS traffic and never NODIS.

(3) NODIS. All those interviewed expressed concerns about this traffic. All consider it highly important. Most believe that once NODIS traffic reaches this building it is handled reasonably well. [redacted] in Mr. Colby's office manages access. She telephones interested principals who then come to her office to read the traffic. NODIS messages are not circulated, copied, or quoted in writing. All but one of the people I talked to had access. [redacted] said Miss [redacted] was forthcoming. Her example, if [redacted] asks that an analyst see the message, [redacted] responds. [redacted] believes the system is "an acceptable situation." On the other hand, Chief, Soviet Branch, Current Intelligence says, "the people who need to read it can't." He with access routinely returns to his office, calls in an analyst and parrots what he just read. He considers this unfortunate. It seems that analysts concerned with ambiance, Brezhnev's health, etc., have a definite disadvantage. [redacted] Dep. Chief, Soviet Branch, OPR complained that he didn't have access. He is doing a paper on Brezhnev's visit to Cairo and is not comfortable about what he knows. After I heard his complaints and mentioned them to [redacted], she said he has seen NODIS from time to time. Nearly everyone said they wondered and worried about what they didn't see and didn't know. All said they were convinced not all important

NODIS traffic is coming to Mr. Colby's office. [ ] was almost angry. He said he, as NIO/WE had not been kept informed by NODIS traffic regarding Greece, Turkey, and Cyprus matters. He is certain there is much he has not read. He said he read absolutely nothing following Dr. Kissinger's recent visit to Rome.

(4) As you recall, the Director recently considered writing Dr. Kissinger a letter seeking his intervention so as to receive more NODIS traffic. [ ] prepared the letter. As part of this initiative, [ ] Chief, CIA Operations Center, reviewed the problem with Dr. Kissinger's staff. He concluded that the staff was liberally interpreting the secretary's policy. Indeed, [ ] determined that the number of messages received recently had not declined as feared by Mr. Carver and [ ] OCI. Dr. Kissinger's staff suggested that if Dr. Kissinger were to get personally involved, he might tighten rather than relax the policy. On this basis Mr. Colby decided not to take the matter up with the secretary at this time. [ ] is prepared to brief you further on this matter, if you so desire.

3. Recommendation:

a. [ ] review this matter from his special perspective when he returns to duty. As a minimum he will be able to describe the STADIS category in a more meaningful way.

b. Monitor the problem on a continuing basis. In our Washington assessments and trips to overseas posts this question should be an item of special interest.

c. We not take this up with the Director nor STATE unless the present situation worsens.
